Important notice to our Shareholders

Merger of the custodian bank

State Street Bank Luxembourg S.C.A. was merged with State Street Bank International GmbH, Luxembourg branch, with effect from 4 November 2019. The initiative aims to simplify and improve the structure and business of the State Street legal entities in Europe for better streamlining. State Street Bank International GmbH, Luxembourg branch, will be the legal successor of State Street Bank Luxembourg S.C.A. and, as such, will have the same duties and responsibilities as State Street Bank Luxembourg S.C.A., including taking over its activities as custodian and registrar and transfer agent of the Company as well as undertaking fund accounting and NAV calculation.

COVID-19

The COVID-19 pandemic caused considerable volatility and uncertainty on the international capital markets. As a result of this situation, it is only possible to make extremely limited general forecasts about capital market trends and future effects. At the current time, as the annual report is being prepared, it is therefore not possible to definitively assess the direct impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the Fund.

Economic situation and capital market in the reporting period/outlook

Global economic downturn impacting investment environment

The year under review began with growth in the global economy. However, in spring 2020 the lockdowns and other restrictions on economic activity that were implemented in many countries in a bid to contain the coronavirus led to a global economic slump.

The developed countries saw a reversal of previously positive investment and labour market trends. The effects of government measures to slow the spread of the virus varied across national economies, but almost every country experienced an unprecedented decline in economic output. The largely export-focused emerging markets were disproportionately affected by the global slump in demand and underdeveloped social systems. There were positive outcomes in certain East Asian countries such as China, however, where the virus was rapidly contained and the economy was able to quickly ramp up again.

The central banks of the developed countries responded immediately to the slump in economic activity with unprecedented levels of monetary easing. In the US, for example, the range for key interest rates fell sharply from the previous positive levels to the recent range of between 0.00 and 0.25%. Furthermore, the US Federal Reserve also included investment-grade corporate bonds in its bond purchases for the first time whilst increasing the scope of the bonds at the same time. The Bank of England also reduced its base rate to almost zero and intervened in the bond market via increased support purchases. The European Central Bank, like the Bank of Japan, stuck to its de facto zero interest policy but considerably increased the money supply by means of additional bond purchases in order to keep the financial system liquid and market interest rates low.

The overall inflation rate fell. This was due in part to the slump in the price of oil to less than half of the base level at some points and in part to the fact that inflation was driven down by the considerable decline in demand in a number of consumer goods sectors as a result of the crisis. Against the backdrop of the uncertainty surrounding future trends in the global economy, the de facto zero interest rates on safe investments and a sinking US dollar, the price of gold rose sharply and remained at this elevated level even in the context of the stabilising economic situation.

Equities: Double-digit price slump and strong regional divergence in recovery

On the equity markets, government measures to contain the coronavirus initially led to an abrupt price collapse that affected all sectors and regions. The liquidity that had flooded into the equity markets, driven in no small part by the central banks, subsequently reduced, leading to a recovery of prices in broad terms. However, the reality is that there were very different pictures in the individual countries. The interim price drops were more than offset in the US, resulting in a double-digit increase overall in percentage terms (in dollars). Also in Japan, where the impact on economic activity had been relatively small, prices rose on average in year-on-year comparison. In the eurozone and in the United Kingdom, conversely, prices were still well below the base level. There was no consistent trend in the emerging markets, where results were in part positive and in part extremely negative depending on the extent of the economic downturn and the subsequent recovery.

There was noticeable volatility on the equity markets in spring 2020 as a result of the economic decline triggered by the measures to combat the coronavirus. The range for price fluctuations did subsequently even out again, but investors remained nervous.

Interest-bearing securities: A beeline for quality and liquidity

The collapse of the global equity markets in spring 2020 led to a surge in demand on the international bond markets for securities, which are perceived as being particularly safe and liquid. This was beneficial in particular for top-rated government bonds from developed countries. Although these generally returned negative interest, this was more than offset by the price increase driven by demand. Investment-grade corporate bonds also returned a slight increase on average, helped by the expanded purchasing programmes from the central banks. This excludes high-interest bonds issued by companies with lower credit ratings. On balance, they returned slightly negative results, although their prices recovered strongly over the summer, on the whole. Considered at individual issuer level, however, the picture was more varied; the different financial perspectives of the debtors became apparent against the backdrop of a still-depressed economic environment. The same was true of securities from emerging markets, which also suffered noticeably as many investors sought refuge in quality and liquidity. However, issuers from emerging economies who are considered to be solid benefitted significantly from the further increase in demand stemming from yield-oriented investors following the price slump. This was also reflected by the decline in the interest rate in the US, which was initially still highly attractive, and the accompanying weakening of the dollar.

Outlook

The economic recovery appears to be holding, but the fear of a second wave of the coronavirus pandemic could dampen consumer spending and investment. Some economic indicators are already pointing to declining momentum, and political uncertainties such as the US presidential elections and the trade agreement disputes between the European Union and the United Kingdom further complicate matters. Equity markets valuations, however, appear mixed. The values are highest in the US and moderate in Europe, Japan and the emerging markets. The ratio of positive to negative earnings revisions from companies has recently improved, which speaks positively for equity markets. Likewise, the very generous monetary policies of the leading central banks need time to deliver on their full potential. Overall, the range for price fluctuation is likely to increase. Opportunities are set to open up at equity, sector and country level for those actively managing their active equity market investments.

The US Federal Reserve expects rates to remain low until at least 2023 based on its flexible average inflation targeting approach, and its quantitative easing (QE) purchases are expected to continue. Meanwhile, the European Central Bank is discussing greater flexibility in its Pandemic Emergency Purchase Programme, whilst the Bank of England is considering negative interest rates. Against the background of existing downside risks, key interest rates are likely to remain low—or even negative in real terms—for longer. Government bond yields are expected to remain very low/negative for the time being. Corporate bonds are set to continue benefitting from central bank demand. However, default rates could increase if the crisis flares up again, due to high corporate debt.
